

Apollo was the God of music, reason and light. He was the son of Zeus and Leto. He was very special and many people often gave him gifts but this was very exhausting for Apollo.

One day, Apollo decided to create an oracle, a wise woman to speak for him. She could interpret the future.

However, Apollo needed a place for his oracle to live. He found a place called Crista for her to live but a serpent called Python lived there already.

Python didn't want to give up his home. So, Apollo and Python had a battle. Apollo won and named his oracle after Python, he named her Pythia.

Apollo still needed some preists to worship and look after Pythia. So, he turned into a dolphin and swam up to a ship and steered it back to Crista.

The sailors on the ship were told that they would be preists and Apollo changed the name of Crista to Delphi because he turned into a dolphin.
