

Dear Obnoxious Orang-utan,

Where have you come from? Why are you in my bedroom?! No one else I know has an orang-utan in their house.

You played with my teddies, swung from my plants, and ripped my curtains to tiny pieces. You have made a disgusting mess of my tidy room. The things in my room belong to me!

I am frustrated that I have to clean up your mess. As a result of your uncleanliness, I cannot find my favourite teddy and my yummy chocolate treats have made my pink carpet sticky. Not to mention the slimy parts of my walls where you smeared my lavender shampoo. Why should I have to clean up your mess? This has made me extremely miserable because I always keep my room sparkling clean but now it smells like a pigsty.

The fact is, I would like for you to go away! I will only allow you to visit if you respect my room and everything in it.

From Mistreated Mia

How does the girl feel? How do you know?
Can you identify some key words that suggest this?

I am ...
because ...

I would feel ... because ...

nervous

uncomfortable

insignificant

abused

cautious

dismayed

exasperated

desperate

betrayed

betrayed

let down

wounded

frustrated

hurt

desolate

upset

downhearted

disgusted

disappointed